study notes for “Egg Tooth”

introduction, from Leo Kottke/My Feet Are Smiling

Leo Kottke and Michael Johnson wrote “Egg Tooth” as part of a musical suite and recorded it as a duet for the soundtrack of a short film, “A Little Snow Starts to Fall Again: A Visual Essay by Marcel C. Kahn.” But even before the film was released in 1974, Kottke had revised this material, added a beautiful, freely expressive introduction, and included it on his 1973 Capital LP Leo Kottke/My Feet Are Smiling. Kottke performed this version in concert in 1972 and 1973, but already by 1974 was continuing to revise and reconfigure this material.

The transcription released by Stropes Editions, Ltd. in 2000 was developed from Kottke’s historic performance of “Egg Tooth” at the 1977 Montreux Jazz Festival. The crowd went wild! He performed this iteration of “Egg Tooth” as a solo through the 1970s and as part of a medley which included “Egg Tooth,” “Grim to the Grim,” and “Orange Room” in the 1980s.

Here, we have the beautiful introduction from Leo Kottke/My Feet Are Smiling. On this recording, Kottke is playing a 12-string guitar in standard tuning, tuned four half-steps low; the resultant pitches are C₂C₁ F₃F₂ B₃B₂ E₄E₃ G₃G₃ C₄C₄.

The introduction is presented as seven phrases. The phrases are separated by a space to represent that there is a discontinuation of the normal pulse of the rhythm and meter. Each phrase begins at quarter note ≈ 80 ; the first six phrases gradually slow until the end of the phrase.
